Talking about Compensation

- For HR professionals, compensation is analytical; for many candidates, it's emotional
- compensation element indicative of responsibility level, and accordingly Many candidates are fixated on base salary, viewing this as the only may use base salary to chart progress in their careers
- It's important that candidates take into account the total compensation package and are also made aware of how Google pays relative to the
- We encourage recruiters to walk their candidates through our packages step-by-step (the Compensation Modeling Tool should make this task
- Some candidates express risk-aversion, claiming that they can't rely on variable compensation elements
- Google is a pay-for-performance culture, and we're serious about rewarding high achievement, both on the individual and company levels
- compensation figures; we suggest that recruiters request confirmation We've found that a few candidates tend embellish their current when such figures appear aggressive or out-of-the-ordinary

Answering Candidates' Questions

- Q: "Why am I taking a cut in base pay to come to Google?"
- A: "While your base pay may decrease, your total compensation (base, bonus and equity) will be increasing. In addition, the numbers we are presenting are your targets. If you are high performer, then there is the potential to earn significantly more." •
- Q: "Why should I value the equity when the stock price keeps falling?"
- A: "Even when the stock price is falling, your equity has value. Each GSU is equivalent to one share of Google stock. So, even if the price is falling, the GSU will still have value. As for options, our TSO program helps to provide value for out-of-the-money options. This one-of-a-kind program allows employees to monetize the time value of the option."

- Q: "I'm expecting a 4% salary increase at the end of the year. What type of increase can I expect at Google?"
- While not every emploýee is guaranteed an increase, every employee's salary is evaluated. review process whereby salaries are increased based on performance and market position. A: "Each year, Google's Compensation team evaluates every job to determine what the market reference point should be. In parallel with the job reviews, there is annual salary

- Q: "I feel like the only thing I can count on is base salary, since everything else is variable."
- A: "Although bonus payouts will vary, it's worth considering that every year since Google launched its bonus program, the company multiplier has been greater than 1.0. In fact, over the past 5 years, we of Googlers have received at least their target bonus."
- Q: "I'm working at a pre-IPO startup, and it seems like Google is undervaluing my equity •
- A: "When evaluating offers, Google does not always value pre-IPO equity in the same way a candidate might. This is due to the fact that there is rarely a consensus on how to value a particular company's pre-IPO equity (due to the need to risk-adjust the value based on the likelihood of the company going public). Google stock is publically traded and currently has a value that can be easily determined."
- Q: "If I take this offer, I'll be relocating to an area with a higher cost of living. It looks like my offer doesn't take this into account." •
- A: "Our compensation packages are based on the cost of labor and competitive local pay rates – not cost of living. While similar, cost of living and cost of labor are not perfectly correlated, and some geographies pay more aggressively relative to others."
